

Chicago, Sunday August 5.
1923.

Dear Mrs. Brown:

Your charming attentions to my birthday are gracefully appreciated, and I feel badly to have neglected to tell you this sooner. I heard asked me this morning "are you not ashamed in not having written Mrs. Brown?" to which I indolently replied, "hm, hm", meaning yes, and she said, do you think Mrs. Brown knows you are saying "hm, hm". I had a real nice birthday - celebrating it with a visit to the Theatre, to which the firm gave me two tickets for the "Dancing King".

The folks are away on the "Hanni" today - left at 7 in the morning, so we are all alone at the house, and having wandered from room to room, I will tell you what decorations we found in yours; sh-sh, don't let anyone hear it; up on two hangers are two pair little 'parties' of the children hanging up on the electric chandelier; we laughed so much, it looks too funny for words! It keeps sticking up in the air. Enough of nonsense; how do you feel? and where are you now? We had a big fly in our room, and it must have bitten me on my left eye, because it is quite swollen, and I attribute it to that.

The pen I have is nice and scratchy, and that why this looks the same, I mean this writing.

We have to get dressed for dinner, it is nearly four o'clock, and we are feeling some of hunger.

Take good care of yourself, Mrs. Brown, and make the most of your visits.

I want so thank you for the very pretty and useful gift, which is already in use.

kindest greetings to you and yours, I am

Most sincerely yours
Edith Lisle
